Good evening. I just wanted to drop you a line to say that I happened to be on the underground yesterday 15th November when a group of children from your school got into the carriage I was travelling in. They were easily identifiable by their orange jackets and I took note of which school they were from, so impressed I was by their conduct. The behaviour exhibited by them was excellent. I noticed that they lined up against the platform wall prior to getting on the train and got into the carriage without noise and fuss.

Children went to spare seats where they could and some proceeded to remove reading books from their bags and soon became engrossed. It was lovely to see as so often children on school trips are over-excited and do not exhibit appropriate behaviour when on public transport. Well done to all of them, including the adults who engaged enthusiastically with the children in their groups. I hope they enjoyed their visit to the Tower of London.

Kind regards,

A former Education employee and participant of many a school trip
